About the Conference

Space plays a key role in fostering international cooperation between states and in bettering the lives of human society. As Asia continues to develop a number of key players in space, it becomes imperative that the region reflect on the importance law plays in directing and shaping individual and collective action within the region and beyond, as well as how law structures the distribution of its benefits to civil society within the region.

The Conference brings together a body of the region’s leading legal experts from the region to discuss issues related to the role of law in regulating the region’s activities in space. The issues presented during the day and a half reflect important current debates in contemporary space law and policy tailored to a wide range of professionals, academics and students.

About the Organizers

The International Institute of Space Law (IISL) is an international nongovernmental organization incorporated in the Netherlands and headquartered in France. Founded in 1960, IISL hosts numerous international conferences on outer space law, including its 54th Colloquium on the Law of Outer Space in October 2011, as well as the Manfred Lachs Space Law Moot Court Competition. As of June 2008, IISL has been granted permanent observer status at the United Nations Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space (UNCOPUOS).

The Indonesian Society of International Law (ISIL) is an organization focusing on the promotion of the study of international law in Indonesia. ISIL is dedicated to enhancing the legal community and civil society’s knowledge of the practice of international law. Established in 2002, it regularly holds seminars and international moot court competitions for law students, including the Indonesian national rounds of the Jessup Moot Court Competition and the International Humanitarian Law Moot Court Competition. In June 2010, it co-organized, together with the Asian Society of International Law, the conference “International Law as a Political Instrument?”
